PROTECTION OF HIGHWAY CROSSINGS

Among the many important orders made by the railway board is that just issued for the better protection of highway crossings. Everyone will readily admit that this grievance needed urgent attention and remedying, for wherever the highway crossing exists, there has always, and always will, lurk a fatal danger spot, and there is scarcely a district where railroad crossings are but what has paid its toll in precious lives. Railway crossings are a necessary evil in a country like this. Perhaps on the open prairie the danger may not be so great as it is in the case in the wooded and thickly settled districts; but for all that many lives have been lost yearly. True, in many cases it has been through the victims' own carelessness in risking their lives in trying to rush across the track on the very near approach of an oncoming train. If proper regulations are made and then strictly observed both by those in charge of the train and the highroad travelling public, the number of fatal crossing accidents could be greatly minimized. It may sometimes be difficult to gauge the distance of a train and its arrival at a given point, but it only common sense was exercised, with a wholesome dread of accidents, there is generally plenty of time to stop at a safe distance until the train has passed over and the track can be crossed in safety. Every precaution should be used by those in charge of the train as it approaches a crossing, as well as the public. Life is short, but not so short as to risk life and limb in a mad endeavor to race a speedy train as to which shall cross over the track first. An ounce of prevention is better than a cure, particularly at a railroad crossing.

Under the new regulations it is ordered that the posts to which the bells and other signals are attached, if of timber, must be sound in quality, not less than 8x8 in dimension and 18 feet in length, and sunk a distance of 4 feet in the ground; if of iron or steel, at least 4 inches in diameter 12 feet in height and firmly bolted to a concrete foundation. The bell used must emit a clear, loud volume of sound under all weather conditions. On the same post as the bell there must be a sign with the word "Danger," in letter not less than six inches in length and illuminated. The bell and illumination of the sign are to be controlled and operated automatically by the approach of trains in such a manner that this cause only shall be sufficient to operate the signal.

CANADIAN BANKS
The following is taken from the News-Telegram, and we have been asked to publish the same: "The head men of several of our leading banks, from time to time, make speeches at public gatherings which would induce strangers to believe that the farmers of Canada had no better friends than the bankers, and that these institutions exist almost solely for the benefit of our agricultural community. And yet the true state of the case is that the bankers really think that the farmers have been created as a class by providence for their especial benefit. They exploit them all they can. They take their deposits, on which they pay the lowest interest possible, and when the farmer wants a loan or an overdraft, he is charged the highest interest obtainable, and if he fails to meet his notes, has to pay stiffly for extended accommodation. The farmer dare not kick, fearing revenge, and the bank managers knowing this, make the farmer try to believe that he was made for the bank, and not the bank created for the farmer.

"If it were not for the agriculturists of western Canada, the majority of the branch banks of the country would be put out of business, and it is time financiers are taught that the day may come when the farmers of the west will combine, establish a co-operative banking institution of their own, and refuse to have anything further to do with those financial institutions that, after all, are only one weathered friend, and which, when times of stress visit the farmer, close down upon him, not caring who sinks so long as they swim. They will be discovered to their dismay that agriculture is more than the backbone of the country—it is the root, trunk and branch of their existence. This is proved by the bank failures that have characterized the east, while such a disaster is unknown in the west.

"Canadian securities are accepted by English capitalists because they are looked upon as gilt-edged, but it is the farmer who gilds their edges. He has been gilding them mostly for others up to the present, and the time has arrived when he ought to be aiming at getting some advantage from them directly to himself. This can only be secured by co-operation, or the pooling of financial resources, and for this the most approved, profitable and safe project is a co-operative bank, in which his deposits can be made and invested at good interest, while it would always be ready to help him in time of need on terms which would entail no loss on the institution, and inflict no unbearable or extravagant burden upon himself.

The Price of Grain

Considering the amount of grain that there is in the country some of the elevators are finding the trade very slack. In fact it is anything but active at the present time, and farmers absolutely refuse to sell their crop at present prices. These conditions exist all over the province, and the farmer is now putting his grain away in his barns sooner than place it on the market at the low price quoted now. Many farmers state that the prices on grain will have the effect of influencing them to start mixed farming at once, and to realize that it is the most profitable.

Evening classes of military instruction will be held in Edmonton, Calgary, Cardston, Lethbridge, Medicine Hat and other points in western Canada.

The Optimist

There was once a man who smiled
Because the day was bright,
Because he slept at night,
Because God gave him sight
To gaze upon his child;
Because his little one
Could leap and laugh and run.
Because the distant sun
Smiled on the earth he smiled.

He smiled because the sky
Was high above his head,
Because the rose was red,
Because the past was dead.

He never wondered why
The Lord had blundered so
That all things have to go
The wrong way here below
The overarching sky.

He toiled and still was glad
Because the air was free,
Because he loved, and she
That claimed his love and he Shared all the joys they had.
Because the grasses grew,
Because the sweet winds blew,
Because that he could hear
And hammer, he was glad.

Because he lived he smiled
And did not look ahead
With bitterness and dread,
But nightly sought his bed
As calmly as a child.
And people called him mad
For being always glad
With such things as he had
And shook their heads and smiled.

The Dark of the Honeymoon

Showing the Difficulty of Working in Double Harness

By M. F. ARCHIBALD

A newly married couple have often been compared to a team of horses plowed for the first time in double harness. It is an excellent comparison. The start is made when the wedding journey is over and the couple enter upon the routine of ordinary life. Their expectations usually lie that the blitting and coming will last so long as they live. But lovers are elevated upon an emotional plane that cannot be sustained. They have to come down to earth, to the real life, to the real world, to the real world of work and of duty. They find that one has been accustomed to go at one pace, the other at another. One has one's own way, the other has a different one. But it is the coming down from the sentimental rhapsody condition that often brings about the breaking in to traveling double harness in life.

Full Ormsby and Rosalind Serimere returned from their honeymoon in the morning. They entered their cozy little home. Rosalind was nineteen and Phil was twenty-two. Rosalind was at an age where a newly married person would expect a woman, is not prepared for a sudden descent from the sentimental condition. This was the character of the honeymoon. The season of preparation for the wedding had come upon him when he was actually engaged in business, and the two together had to make their own life. Then came the honeymoon, and, though at first it brought a delightful rest, before long the honeymoon resulted in a sudden descent from the sentimental condition. The result was that when he found himself at home he was pleased to return to a normal condition of life in his private and business life. The first day on coming home from business he greeted his wife with just a little less of a lover's exuberance than he had been in the habit of showing, and, knowing himself to be in a normal condition, he began to enter upon an evening newspaper and began to read it over.

His wife read his newspaper. They had entered upon the routine of the domestic life, the routine of the real matrimonial life. The honeymoon had been a period of a portal of their new companionship at the same moment. As in the case of a team of newly yoked horses, where the one has settled down to a trot while the other is still cantering—so Phil entered upon the routine of ordinary life, while Rosalind had been in the habit of cantering.

"Phil, what you read in that newspaper?"

He was somewhat tired, but he did not expect to be asked to read the paper. He had expected to be asked to read the paper. He had expected to be asked to read the paper.

"Anything special happened during the day?"

"A great deal has happened, but you have been so occupied with your own news that I supposed you would not be interested in your home."

"Nothing that would interest you?"

"Oh, dear, how can you say that? Anything that concerns you interests me."

"I thought, until you came home the first evening after your honeymoon, that my wedding journey and took more interest in the world's news than in your own."

"Phil didn't reply to this at once. For months he had been very pleased with his wife. Now he wondered why this one answered him."

"Tell me, sweetheart, what has gone wrong today?"

"Well, nothing that you need worry about. I dare say the news of business has been quite enough for you to endure. I can leave that to you."

"Tell me one thing you have had to bear?"

"Well, in the first place, I telephoned the plumber to set a porcelain sink and he was not at home."

"That's not bad. What else?"

"There are mice in the house. One came in today and ran along the baseboard."

"What'll you trap about that?"

"That's a good idea."

He drew her down into his lap and there was a little "cuddling" as much as now that they could only as much as they cared in. There were no more of the same sort. At last, at last, Phil was not so sorry when they were summing to dinner.

A fortnight passed during which there were many recurrences of such scenes. Though the husband was as well as when they first met, the wife was as well as when they first met. The husband was as well as when they first met, the wife was as well as when they first met.

One afternoon, returning from business, Phil found his wife empty and alone. He went to his wife's room and found her sitting at the window, looking out at the street. He went to her and found her sitting at the window, looking out at the street. He went to her and found her sitting at the window, looking out at the street.

Most women would have looked upon this as a sign of her husband's neglect. But Rosalind was not a woman who would be so easily offended. She was a woman who would be so easily offended. She was a woman who would be so easily offended.

SMALLER PAPER MONEY.

Secretary MacVeggie Plans to Reduce Size of the National Banknote.

The size of all United States currency and national banknotes will be reduced by one-third and the altered notes revolutionized for the sake of economy to the government, convenience to the public and safety against the possibility of forgery. Secretary MacVeggie of the Treasury has his way.

It is estimated that the dimensions of the 20-cent banknote will be reduced by 25 per cent. The paper money now in circulation is 10 by 6.5 inches. The designs of all paper money—United States notes and certificates—will be reduced in size and systematized and made uniform for every denomination.

This move is expected to save the government about $100,000 annually and the national banks, which pay for the printing of their notes and part of the cost of redemption, about $200,000.

For many months the only detractor to the plan of executive authorities has been the belief that it would be necessary for Congress to appropriate about $5,000,000 to replace the national bank notes which have been paid for by the national banks. This problem has been solved by a plan to have the general design of all national bank notes uniform, requiring only one engraved plate for each denomination, and to place the name, location and character number of the bank. This would allow many banks to share the cost of the engraved plate.

Eighteen months would be required to effect the change. To meet the obsolescence of the old notes, the government print in advance a sufficient quantity of the notes of the new size. It has been estimated that the new notes and national banks on a fixed date. The change could be substantially accomplished by the time the new treasury officials believe.

There are now sixteen different designs of the United States banknotes. Each denomination has a different design. The new design will be a single design for each denomination. A TROUSERS CENTENARY.

Was Napoleon's Men Who Brought the First Trousers into Fashion.

As nearly as can be ascertained it was a hundred years since Napoleon Bonaparte introduced the old-style trousers, which were made of a single piece of material, and were fastened by a button at the waist.

In 1816—the year before Waterloo—it was a current news item that the Emperor Napoleon had ordered the Duke of Wellington to have made a pair of trousers for him. The Duke of Wellington had been ordered to make a pair of trousers for him. The Duke of Wellington had been ordered to make a pair of trousers for him.

As a matter of historical fact trousers have been worn by various races and by both sexes in all the ages of which any authentic records exist. Generally speaking, trousers were regarded as a mark of civilization and of inferiority or effeminacy. In the triumphal procession of the Caesars, for example, prisoners of war were taken as a sign of defeat, while the trousers of Roman victors were worn below the bottom of the skirt or loincloth of mail.

For the last hundred years or thereabouts the garments of authority, the trousers of the military, the trousers of the law, the trousers of the clergy, the trousers of the aristocracy, the trousers of the bourgeoisie, the trousers of the proletariat, the trousers of the proletariat, the trousers of the proletariat.

"EXTENDING" CREDIT.

A Kind of Banking That Didn't Appear to the Doctor.

A group of men contemplated starting a branch store, upon a day in the town of the man who he expected to pay for it, investigating, installing, conditions. In case a little girl of two pounds of sugar, a package of starch, some soap and coffee. The purchases came to 87 cents.

"Have you got a dollar, tomorrow," she said, "and will you pay now?"

"And she wants the change now," the child added. "She needs money to buy the groceries."

Unhappily he counted 13 cents. The crying grocer was amazed. "Is that the way you do business down here?" he asked.

"Have you got the neighborhood tradesman," "Can't get along any other way. You have to get the people you can safely extend credit to, but the judgment and the will to carry on a limited banking business without interest is the least of every grocer's success in this part of town."

The grocer abandoned the new enterprise. "Philadelphia Public Ledger."

THE SOUL'S GREAT QUESTION.

Text: "What shall I do to be saved?"

THE SOUL'S GREAT QUESTION. Text: "What shall I do to be saved?" It was a strange place, a strange hour, with a strange auditor and a strange preacher. The place was a dungeon, the hour midnight, the audience a jailer, the preacher a prisoner. However, stone walls will not make a prison nor steel bars a cage. The prisoners, Paul and his companion, Silas, in a place where curses were ordinarily heard, were shouting praises and singing a "glory song" of their own. At midnight the foundations shook and the walls rocked. The jailer sprang into his presence ready to kill himself, thinking the prisoners had escaped. But the scene was a different one. "What we are all here," then the jailer asked the soul's great question.

"What must I do to be saved?" This answer was, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved." It is the most momentous question of history. Public teachers are always ready to give a simple answer to the manly drift. But it is possible to be misled by mere answers. On the street they are always giving the answer to the manly drift. But it is possible to be misled by mere answers. On the street they are always giving the answer to the manly drift.

You lucky people, he growled; he gave Jim Francis a quick glance. It seemed as if he, too, had discovered the secret of life; his well-tanned face was wreathed in smiles; he held himself erect, and in his eyes Scribner saw the pride of a young man very much in love.

Yes, Jim Francis was in love, in a year or two, reach the meridian of forty.
 Come and have a look at her, Francis said, she's a little beauty. Scribner shook his head, and his eyes sought Mrs. de Pontalieu again. They remained fixed on her, and for a moment her face was robbed of joy, for she read in Scribner's eyes disappointment, jealousy and greed. In spite of his tailor, his hairdresser, and his valet, he looked so really was a man who had tasted all the sweets of life and found none in it; he looked like a man who, though he had looked towards the stars, had not seen them.

Your car, I suppose you mean, he said lightly. No, I mean you, he said. A business appointment. Hating his life he moved quickly to the door. He gave a little sign of relief when he had gone.

You don't like the Honorable Peter, Francis smiled.

Oh, yes, I do, he replied almost apologetically. But that's something rather queer about him, isn't that?

To have loved you and lost you is enough to make a man a little queer. Jim whispered, I'm an unlucky chap. I let him know that I was his bad luck. I'll try to put him on to something good when I married. The lovers passed on through the suburbs of the street. Like the birds in the trees, they were unmindful, they were building their nests; being everything that looked good in their eyes with which they could take to their future home. They had not a care in the world; love was their only god. Wealth was their friend, and, evidently, the gods were kind to them.

But sometimes the gods grow jealous of mere mortals climbing too near Olympus.

The Honorable Peter Scribner waited the opportunity and drove into the office of Arthur Roberts. He tried to look as if he were paying an afternoon visit and when Peter Roberts, chief clerk, held out his large hands he greeted him with a nervous, nervous smile and swore under his breath. Peter was long and lean, the eyes of a snake, the mouth of a ferret; his voice was like that of a fire on a great ship. He never spoke, he never smiled, he never showed his teeth.

Mr. Roberts, he looked at the man. How'd you do—that can I do for you the latter half of the year?

Mr. Roberts? He engaged for a moment. Come inside, he won't keep you long.

Always in demand, Scribner growled, let him I can't wait for him.

He won't keep you a second, Peter. But, what Scribner wanted was to get into the waste-paper basket. He walked trippingly up the stairs, and into the room. It was sparsely furnished; there was a square table, a chair, a chair and a bureau; an odor of cigarette smoke permeated the room, and it seemed to rest of life of sale, promissory notes, and post dated checks.

Presently the door opened noiselessly, and Mr. Roberts came in. He looked at Scribner; physically he was the antithesis of Peter; he was short and fat, clean-shaven, slightly balding, round, good-humored face. Only his nose and his manner, his eyes, his smile, any hint of his Semitic origin; but spoke brusquely, but his voice was soft, almost pleasant. His hands, too, were very, but unpleasant, in their small of money.

Lovely spring day, isn't it, Mr. Scribner? Won't you sit down? Haven't you any luck with the horses lately?

Damn the horses; you know what I want, Roberts. This was Scribner's way of asking a favor. Once upon a time he fondly believed that tradesmen and money-lenders were born into the world for his especial benefit; lately he had begun to believe that they had been sent to the world to ruin him.

Get a little cheque for me, perhaps, Roberts suggested impudently. Let me see a thousand and the interest on it to date make it one thousand, two hundred and thirty-four pounds.

The Honorable Peter smiled grimly as he sat down and pulled out his cheque book. You see, he said, I give you a cheque for that amount. But we've advanced the last thousand in exchange for three thousand.

A look of genuine distress crossed the moneylender's kindly face. I'm afraid that's impossible, Mr. Scribner. When we've advanced the last thousand you promised—

I know, Roberts replied tightly. I know, but I won't let me have a penny. You know perfectly well I shall pay you. I'll give you a cheque for it. She's somewhere near eighty now.

Her creditors are getting a little impatient. Your creditors are getting a little impatient.

You can keep a secret, I know. You can keep a secret, I know. You can keep a secret, I know. You can keep a secret, I know.

Roberts opened his hand apologetically. It's my business.

I suppose you know the income and the debts of every other man and woman in London. I suppose you know the income and the debts of every other man and woman in London.

She's somewhere near eighty now. Her creditors are getting a little impatient. Your creditors are getting a little impatient.

Children Sold into Slavery
 Did you know that the selling of children into actual slavery still exists as a recognized institution in a civilized community?

The slavery referred to is a practice at Friedrichsruhe, on the Lake of Constance, where there is an actual market for children. They are sold outright for their parents to peasant farmers, for a season's work on the farms. There are seen boys and girls from eleven years of age to sixteen children, for the most part, of typical woodsmen who are driven by sheer destitution to send their offspring to the lake to earn their money.

The children are gathered together in a hall, where they are put up for auction and sold to the highest bidder. The children are sold to the highest bidder, where they are put up for auction and sold to the highest bidder.

The Thanksgiving

Supper and Concert

Given under the auspices of the ladies' aid of the Methodist church on Friday evening last was one of the best and most successful ever given by the ladies' aid. The plentiful supply of food, cakes and other various delicacies that go to make up a bon-ton supper proved beyond a doubt that the ladies of Cayley and district are adepts in the culinary art. It is said that the best way to win over the "lords of creation" is through their appetite, and certainly the ladies had every one of them won over, as we noticed several of these lords looking well contented and shaking hands with themselves after they had left the heavy-laden tables which had been prepared by the ladies on this special occasion. Even the editor of the Hustler was no exception to this rule, expressing his belief that the Cayley and district ladies had 'em all beaten along the line to a frazzle—or a frazzle—for getting up such a dainty spread that would have done honor to the royal chefs at Ottawa. The crowd was one of the largest and jolliest—which is certainly characteristic of the Cayley crowds, anyway—that could be brought together in any town. The supper was served at 6 p.m. and continued to close upon 9 o'clock, and even when the tables were at last cleared and taken down, some were compelled to take their plates in their hands and finish their supper standing up. Finally the curtain was raised and the platform cleared for action for the second part of the programme:

THE CONCERT

This proved to be among the best ever given in Cayley. The most fastidious critic would have hard work to find any fault with any of the numbers on the programme. It certainly proved that those who took part spent more time in its preparation than is sometimes the case. Cayley is noted for its musical and amateur talent, and without any exception, for its size, Cayley cannot be beaten in Alberta, and last Friday's concert would prove this statement to the most sceptical critic. It is hard to single out any one number as "the best." The singing, recitations and instrumentalings were above the average.

The song tableau "Woman's Rights," and the popular drama "A letter from home" were well presented, and created much laughter. In the latter, Caleb, a deacon from down east, made several good hits in his specializing some of the events happening in the village, and also his general get-up evoked much amusement; the other characters in the drama were also good. The song drill by the "Merry little gypsies" and the drill given by twelve girls were both admirably presented and warmly applauded, as they deserved to be. The others taking part in the programme were equally successful. Misses Russell and Stirling and Mr. Cote in their solos showed that they had made good use of vocal training, possessing unusual talent in compass of and richness of voice.

Miss Ash is a bona electionist, and we understand that very much of the success of the entertainment was due to this talented young lady. The proceeds of the evening amounted to some $73.00 and the value of the evening's social intercourse cannot be estimated.

Have All Doubtful Seed

Tested for Vitality

Owing to the fact that climatic conditions have again been unfavorable in certain districts to the satisfactory maturity of seed grain, we wish to draw the attention of every farmer to the advisability of having his seed tested for germination.

Oats are particularly subject to injury by frost, and in certain stages of their growth are rendered worthless for seed purposes, even though they may look perfectly plump and sound outwardly. Others again, though undoubtedly frozen, are not seriously affected in vitality. As a germination test is the only sure indication of the grain's condition in such cases, we would strongly advise having all doubtful oats tested.

Flax is also subject to injury by frost as well as moisture, and its vitality may be considerably lowered by these factors. Barley is affected likewise and often shows a low percentage of growth when cut after frost. Wheat, on the other hand, is much less liable to injury and will usually germinate readily even when frozen quite severely. It may, however, be rendered unfit for seed by frost or through excessive moisture.

Timothy cut after frost should be tested, as it is often greatly reduced in vitality. We would suggest having tested any other cereal or fodder seeds that may be suspected of not being up to the full standard of germination.

In sending in samples to be tested the following points should be remembered:

1. All samples are tested free of charge.

2. Seed bags suitable for sending samples may be had on application to the Dominion Seed Laboratory, Calgary, Alta.

3. About half such a bag full (1000 grains) is ample for a germination test.

4. If possible samples should be cleaned before sending.

5. Postage should be prepaid at the rate of 2 cents for 4 ounces, and 1 cent for each additional 4 ounces.

6. It is unnecessary to enclose stamps for a reply.

7. The usual time necessary for a rate is 10 days, but when a retest is made a longer period is required.

8. All samples should be plainly marked with the name and address of sender, together with an identification designation when more than one is sent.

9. All samples should be sent to the Dominion Seed Laboratory, Calgary, not to any individual member of the staff.

In addition to the above, this Department, when required, tests any kind of cereal or fodder seeds for purity from noxious weeds. Samples sent in for such purposes should contain not less than one pound of the larger grains and two ounces of flax, grasses and clovers.
